As to the renewal of hostilities to unite Korea, as long as Communists are adamant to constructive offers of the Free World, there will be no alternative but to drive them out of the places where they have no right to be. For that purpose, South Korea can't fight the joint forces of Chinese and North Korean Communists without the help of the Free World, however aloud S Rhee speaks of our single-handed northward march. How could we possibly put a single step forward without producing a single bullet or a single drop of oil? The Berlin conference was another futile round of empty talks, and we Koreans hope that the Geneva conference should not become a second Munich. In my estimation, the decision of the march on North Korea depends upon the sincerity of the Communists at the conference. Their insincerity and non-cooperation should become the green light for the northward march. We have waited long and patiently to relax the world tension created by the Communists. I feel we have every justification to force them to stay in order.
